Don't sell lots gov't gave you, settlers urged

By Cynthia D. Balana

VICE PRESIDENT NOLI DE CASTRO APPEALED yesterday to beneficiaries of the government's national housing program to keep their newly acquired homes and not sell them to squatter syndicates and contribute further to the squatting problem in the country.

"The houses provided to you by the government are not only benefits for a lifetime but a legacy that you can pass on to your children and succeeding generations. Keep and take very good care of them," De Castro told some 400 squatter families who were awarded certificates of title and lot entitlement in Cavite the other day.

De Castro lamented that some beneficiaries of the housing program under the North Luzon Railway relocation program were selling their newly acquired houses.

"For one reason or another, some of the families who were relocated in the north are selling their houses. This worries me because the government can't afford to give them a second chance to have their very own house and lot," he said.

Instead of selling their houses, De Castro urged the relocated families to use the properties as collateral to obtain small loans to start businesses and augment their incomes.

"Napakakaking bagay po ang pagkakaroon ng lupa, dahil hindi lamang po ito tirahan kundi maging maging kapital din para sa inyong pagunlad. Puede ninyong gamiting kolateral iyan para makautang ng pondong pang-negosyo (Having your own lot is a very big thing because not only could you live on it, it could provide you with collateral)," De Castro said.

For his part, Cavite Vice Gov. Jonvic Remulla said government efforts to make a brighter future for the homeless families would go to waste if they turned the national relocation program into a milking cow.

Exercise may not protect old from mental decline

PHILADELPHIA (UPI)—A study of 1,000 elderly people found that regular exercise did not protect them from mental decline, according to researchers at the University of Pennsylvania.

The study, which was published in the journal Psychology of Women Quarterly, found that elderly people who exercised regularly did not show more mental decline than those who did not exercise.

The researchers said that the study suggests that other factors, such as diet and social interaction, may be more important in protecting elderly people from mental decline.

Ombudsman plans manual on whistle-blowing, tips

By [illegible] and [illegible] for The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — The U.S. Office of Inspector General is planning a manual on whistle-blowing and tips for employees, a move that could help protect workers from retaliation and ensure that their concerns are properly handled.

The manual, which is being developed by the OIG's Office of the Inspector General, will provide guidance on how to report wrongdoing, what to expect from the process, and how to protect oneself from retaliation.

The manual is expected to be released in the coming months. It will be available to all federal employees and contractors.

The OIG is one of the many federal agencies that have a responsibility to protect whistleblowers. The agency's mission is to ensure the integrity of the federal government and to protect the public interest.

The manual will be a valuable resource for employees and contractors who want to report wrongdoing. It will provide them with the information they need to understand the process and to protect themselves from retaliation.

Poverty bramed for abuses

WASHINGTON — A report from the U.S. Office of Inspector General (OIG) has found that poverty is a major factor in the abuse of federal benefits programs. The report, which was released last week, found that many people who are poor are unable to understand the rules of the programs and are therefore at risk of being penalized for non-compliance.

The report also found that many people who are poor are unable to afford the costs of the programs, such as transportation and childcare. This can lead to them being unable to attend appointments or to miss deadlines.

The OIG is calling for more help for poor people to understand the rules of the programs and to afford the costs. It is also calling for more help for people who are unable to attend appointments or to miss deadlines.

The report is a valuable resource for people who are poor and who are struggling to understand the rules of the programs. It provides them with the information they need to understand the rules and to avoid being penalized for non-compliance.

Without formal tests to check bird flu

WASHINGTON — The U.S. Office of Inspector General (OIG) has found that the federal government is not doing enough to check for bird flu. The report, which was released last week, found that the government is not testing enough birds for the virus and is not doing enough to prevent the spread of the virus.

The report also found that the government is not doing enough to protect people from the virus. It is calling for more testing of birds and for more protection for people.

The report is a valuable resource for people who are concerned about bird flu. It provides them with the information they need to understand the risks and to take steps to protect themselves.

What's Up?

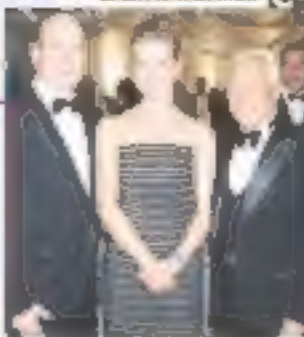

In the morning, we were surprised to see that I had a high fever. I was very tired and I was feeling very weak. I was in the hospital for a few days and I was given a lot of medicine. I was very lucky to be there and to get the help I needed.

The next day, we were back to work. I was feeling much better and I was able to do my job. I was very happy to be back and to see my friends and family. I was also very grateful for the love and support of my fans.
